Behavioural Work Styles

Thank you for completing the behavioural assessment! This is your behavioural profile outlined against 6 workstyles describing your preferences, attitudes and approaches to work, ideas and interacting with others.

This snapshot of your styles may help you understand which jobs or positions best fit your interests, tendencies and motivations.

Your Task Style

Based on your results from the behavioural questionnaire people may see you as:

- Striving and results-oriented when the path to your goals is clear
- Willing to be flexible with deadlines and priorities in the face of setbacks and find new goals to be energizing
- Generally comfortable with ambiguity and prefer spontaneity over detailed planning and organizing
- Occasionally interested in the big picture and doing things in unconventional or new ways

Your Adaptation Style

Based on your results from the behavioural questionnaire people may see you as:

- Having broad and varied ideas and intellectual interests
- Progressive and forward-thinking, as well as focused on innovation and creativity
- Open-minded about some topics, but firm in opinions and beliefs about others
- Willing to change and adapt at times, and preferring trusted approaches as long as they continue to work
- Preferring to leverage existing strengths but willing to develop new ones as well
- More interested in development opportunities when there is potential for reward

Your Achievement Style

Based on your results from the behavioural questionnaire people may see you as:

- Having high career aspirations and determined to be the best
- Having very high expectations and standards and focused on achieving challenging objectives
- Somewhat motivated to take the lead and be in charge, able to direct others and hold them accountable
- Generally confident in ability to make tough decisions

Your Interaction Style

Based on your results from the behavioural questionnaire people may see you as:

- Confident sharing opinions they feel strongly about
- Enjoying competition and debate as long as it does not get confrontational
- Comfortable working independently, but also enjoys social interaction at work
- Socially confident in most situations but sometimes more reserved when interacting with people they do not know well

Your Emotional Style

Based on your results from the behavioural questionnaire people may see you as:

- Calm and stable in stressful situations
- Steady, level-headed, and effective at concealing feelings and emotions
- Aware of both the positive and negative aspects of people and situations
- Generally optimistic and hopeful about the future, but also realistic
- Concerned with what others think, but only up to a certain point
- Aware of strengths and weaknesses, but having some blind spots as well

Your Teamwork Style

Based on your results from the behavioural questionnaire people may see you as:

- Generally preferring to work in a team rather than independently
- Mostly collaborative, as well as largely considerate, polite, and helpful
- Generally sympathetic and supportive, interested in others' problems
- Largely interested in understanding others' behaviour and giving others the benefit of the doubt
- Effective at advocating for their own interests when necessary
- Proud of achievements and success, but willingly shares credit with others

Conclusion

We recognise that everyone excels at something different and hope you find the information in this report valuable as you consider what motivates and drives you. Self-knowledge is a powerful tool that can shape how you create and reach goals throughout your life and career.
